Benambra stays blue

Despite a state-wide swing against the Liberals in Saturday's election, Member for Benambra, Bill Tilley, bucked the trend and is likely to be returned with an increase in the primary vote of 10 per cent.

Mr Tilley polled 43.56% of the primary first preference votes compared to his main rival, Independent Jacqui Hawkins, who scored 32.12%.

The poll was a lot closer on a two candidate preferred basis with Mr Tilley recording 51.13% and Ms Hawkins 48.87%.

"I'm grateful and humbled by the support at this election," Mr Tilley said.

"When the count is complete it looks like my primary will be up by more than 10 percent. That's massive and I'll take that as a vote of confidence and approval for the work through the pandemic, fires and the health crisis.

Timber shortage threatens mill jobs

The time for an appeal to be heard against a Supreme Court decision stopping VicForests from harvesting timber could have a significant impact on the operations of a Corryong sawmill.

The Court found the state-owned logging group broke the law by failing to protect endangered gliders when logging in Gippsland and Central Victoria.

Volunteer environment groups King Lake Friends of the Forest and Environment East Gippsland accused VicForests of failing to adequately identify and protect greater gliders and yellow-bellied gliders during its operations.

In her judgement on November 4, Justice Melinda Richards determined VicForests' methods for protecting gliders were "inadequate", "likely to be ineffective" and "not consistent with relevant scientific research."

"At present VicForests does not survey all of a coupe (a small area of forest) before harvesting and so it plans and undertakes timber harvesting operations without knowing where gliders live ... and which parts of the coupe should be retained for their habitat," the judgement said.

"The ecological evidence was clear — gliders that live in coupes that are harvested in accordance with VicForests' current practices will probably die as a result of the harvesting operations."

Greater gliders were recently listed as endangered after a significant decline in numbers.

VicForests is preparing an urgent appeal regarding the final orders and wants it listed for hearing as soon as possible.

However, Corryong mill owner, Graham Walker, is concerned that if the appeal drags on his order of logs from VicForests will be stopped.

He estimates that the mill's existing supply of timber will be depleted by March 2023 at which time he may have to stand down his 22 workers.

"Once they get a court date that might not be until March, so it doesn't give much of a window to get logs in before the wet season, so I'm not putting a lot of hope in it," Mr Walker said.

"I can't see we're going to get an outcome before the end of March or if not later and depending on what logs we can get, we're going to be running low by then."

Letters to the Editor:-

Timber towns need saving again

I am writing in reference to recent media, coverage about the plight of local timber mills.

This situation takes me back to the early 1980s when the Corryong mill was threatened with a shutdown as it was not allowed take timber out of the forest because some species were being made extinct.

It was before amalgamation of the Upper Murray and Tallangatta Shires in 1984. I was a councillor for the Upper Murray and represented council on the Timber Towns Committee. The meetings were held at Knox in Melbourne every second months and I ended up on the State Committee.

One of the concerns at that time was the possible closure of the mill in Corryong because they were being stopped from getting timber from the forest. The president of the committee was a city councillor in Melbourne. I explained to the committee that when timber is taken from the forest it is replanted to replace the trees taken. Of course, they didn't believe me.

So I said can we get a bus at lunch time and I will take you to see what occurs. As it happened I had passed this area in the Dandenongs on my way to the meeting.

No bus was available but eight car loads of committee members went to see this area. The replanted trees were about eight to ten feet tall. They all said they didn't that happened. It only took half an hour to show them.

When we got back to the meeting I was quick to point out "You folk sit on your shiny seats down here in the city making all the rules and not knowing what is really happening in the country."

It worked out then the mill in Corryong as well as others were able to get more timber from the forest.

I only hope Towong Shire Council will have someone to battle again for our mill as it is one of the main job providers in our area.

Lois Jephcott, Corryong.

Corryong chosen to host emergency event

Corryong has won the bid to host the 2023 North East Emergency Expo, narrowly defeating Tungamah by three points. The Expo is a biennial event that was originally created by a VICSES volunteer to show rural communities in North East Victoria what information and resources are available to them before, during and after an emergency and to help communities build resilience and understanding of what is in their own backyard. This will be the fourth time the event has been run which is now managed by the not-for-profit charity North East Emergency Action Group

INC. (NEEAG) and was created in August 2020 to maintain the running of the expo, which for the first two events was managed by the Victoria SES and the third one was partnered with Go Fish Nagambie. The event is scheduled for 14th October 2023 and will bring something for everyone. There will be a range of emergency service organisations, support groups, service animals, interactive activities (emergency related), workshops, static displays, equipment and vehicle displays, food and drink and much more. There is also a fundraising component of the event with money raised on the day to be used in the Corryong community for any emergency related groups, projects and/or equipment. This decision will be made by the people of Corryong and can include more than one idea, however it must be emergency related. A formal committee will be established early next year to manage the event any persons interested in assisting are invited to speak with Sharyn Nankervis on 0429 742 796. You can find more details about the group and past expos at www.neeag.org.au.

Tilley claims dirty tactics used at booths

Mr Tilley will become Benambra's longest serving Liberal Party MP but said that there's still more to be done. "Barkly Park needs $2 million to fix its sheds and social rooms, we need a long term funding solution for our roads and how I can get a better deal for Albury Wodonga Health," he said. "On the campaign itself I congratulate everyone who put their hand up to run — it's a tough gig. However, Mr Tilley said that based on reports he had received from his volunteers it appeared supporters of the Independent candidate, Jacqui Hawkins, "must thought they were above the rules." "I've seen Labor has already submitted a complaint against the independent campaign and in time we'll do something similar. The rules around signage and the actions of those handing out how to vote cards were abused at any number of polling stations. "Passion and ignorance is not an excuse. This was a tactic and I'll be asking the Victorian Election Commission to be more proactive, issue fines for breaches and in the future, cap representation at polling booths," Mr Tilley said.

Bill Tilley celebrates his election victory on Saturday with a beer.

Independent gave it a shake

Independent candidate for Benambra, Jacqui Hawkins, conceded defeat in the race for Benambra, with her vote count on Sunday morning trailing the incumbent, Bill Tilley, by 671 votes. Ms Hawkins spent election day travelling to each polling booth across the electorate, where her Team Yellow volunteers were out in force in a final push to secure Independent representation for the first time in Benambra's 145-year history. Ms Hawkins said she and her volunteer team celebrated their achievements in Wodonga on Sunday night, watching the vote count teeter on a knife's edge for much of the evening, however despite "giving the electorate a good shake," she recognised the result didn't fall in her favour. "I congratulate Bill Tilley and his team on their campaign and on retaining the seat for Benambra," Ms Hawkins said. "I also congratulate the other candidates this election for the work they and their volunteers have dedicated to their campaigns and this community. "This has been an incredibly close race.

"In 2018, when I first ran, 2000 votes separated myself and the incumbent and this year, I've narrowed that to 671 votes between us. "It's amazing to have increased my first preference share from 16.14 per cent in 2018 to 32.2 per cent this year." Ms Hawkins said she was proud of the outcome and of the volunteer efforts that drove her campaign during the past four months. "We have attracted the attention of the entire state this election and were noted as being one of the seats to watch."

Laze away the summer days

The township of Khancoban is gearing up to celebrate the beautiful Snowy Valleys climate by launching its Seasonal Festivals series starting with SummerDAZE on Sunday 22 January, 2023.

Hot on the tail of a great family night out at the Father's Day Fireworks, Khancoban Events Inc is looking forward to hosting SummerDaze, the first of four seasonal festivals to showcase the town and the businesses and community groups that make the place so special.

Over the next 12 months, SummerDAZE, Autumn FEELS,

WinterVIBES and Spring FIESTA will bring together Khancoban residents, district neighbours and visitors to enjoy an afternoon of entertainment, markets, local produce, food and drinks, kids activities and some Snowy Valleys hospitality.

Event Manager Shelley Neale and the Khancoban Events team is keen to start putting on regular events for the community and visitors.

"The region has so much to offer and Khancoban is the perfect spot, at the edge of Kosciuszko National Park," Shelley said.

"With a lake you can fish and water ski on and plenty of access to walking and biking tracks and being only an hour and a half drive from Thredbo, it is a fantastic family getaway in any season."

Sam Bramham OAM, Australian Paralympic Swimmer, five time medallist including two Gold has just been announced as the keynote speaker at SummerDAZE.

"Sam has a wonderful story and plenty of adventures to share with us including his appearances on Big Brother Australia and Australian Ninja Warrior," Shelley said.

He is also an Ambassador for Disability

Sport & Recreation, Bully Zero Australia, Oz Child and Group Training Association of Australia.

Bring your picnic blanket, camping chair and other comforts and enjoy an afternoon on the lawns beside the Khancoban Pool for some free entertainment, fun and community networking on January 22, 2023.

A fundraising raffle will be held leading up to the event and on the day to contribute to much needed infrastructure in Khancoban Township. The major prize is valued at over $3000 and includes all the gear for a summer of fun.

If you are a small business or community or sporting group in the Snowy Valleys, Snowy Mountains or Upper Murray regions and would like to know more about attending this event as a contributor or sponsor, contact Shelley Neale at khancobanevents@gmail.com.

War nurse commemorated

The recent spate of fine weather has allowed artist Simon White to complete a mural of trailblazing and hitherto largely forgotten WWI nurse, Ivy Bartlett, right of the main entrance to the RSL Hall in Donaldson Street, Corryong.

Staff Nurse Ivy Bartlett, is one of Corryong's unsung heroines. She enlisted in the Australian Army Nursing Corps on 20 July, 1915 and was believed to be the only nurse from Corryong who had volunteered for active service.

She thus became one of more than 3,000 Australian civilian nurses who volunteered and was one of 130 Australian nurses who served in the Australian General Hospital on the Greek Island of Lemnos during the Gallipoli campaign.

Retiree is walking for a noble cause

Dr Prabodh Malhotra, a 70-year-old retiree, is currently passing through the Upper Murray on a solo 1000km charity walk from the MCG to the SCG in support of the McGrath Foundation.

Dr Malhotra began his trek on November 13 in support of the foundation's mission to raise money to fund McGrath Breast Care Nurses in communities right across Australia and increase breast health understanding and awareness.

The wider community is being invited to become involved by joining Dr Malhotra for a five to six kilometre of his journey. Community members can also support the event by cheering up the walkers, dressing up in pink and purchasing merchandise.

McGrath Foundation Ambassador and Director, Tracy Bevan, said they continue to be blown away by the support from Australian communities, which directly helps the foundation in its mission to ensure every family in Australia experiencing breast cancer has access to a breast care nurse no matter where they live – and always for free.

"We are proud to have funded 170 McGrath Breast Care Nurses working nationally who have supported more than 95,000 families going through breast cancer," she said.

"Events like this are truly helping us to make a difference and we couldn't do it without you."

Dr Malhotra said everyone in his support team is excited and looking forward to 'turning pink' and supporting the McGrath Foundation.

He expects to arrive in Corryong this afternoon around 1.30pm.

He is expected to arrive at the SCG in early January to coincide with the opening day of the Sydney Test Match.

Young people meet the media

The water

It had been a relaxing few days at Smiths Beach Resort and we were packing up to go home. Before we went home we took one last trip to the beach. Dad and I loved the beach but Mum not so much. She didn't like beaches one bit. She could go there but would not get in because she was afraid of the water and what lies underneath.

While playing in the sand I thought of a wild idea. While Mum was reading her book, I snuck down to the party shop that was five minutes away and bought an inflatable dummy. After, I went back to the beach resort and went in to our cabin to get some clothes and record myself on the voice recorder that I got from my Dad for my 12th birthday.

I recorded myself screaming and yelling "AUGH! HELP!" in the cabin. I crept back to where Mum was and told her I was going for a walk on the beach but really behind her back I inflated the dummy, put the clothes on him, then taped the voice recorder on his chest. This was going to be good, I said to myself quietly. Then the prank was set. Dad was in on the prank too, so I was hiding in the bushes behind Mum when Dad swam out and placed the dummy in the water. While Mum was reading her magazine, Dad swam back to the beach and I started the prank.

The voice recorder started screaming and yelling as planned. Mum looked up and was concerned, she started freaking out and yelling "LIFEGUARDS SAVE MY BOY!" - but there were no life guards around. I felt a bit bad so I went behind Mum and scared her, she screamed and then after a sigh of relief, said "Don't scare me like that ever again!" She turned away angrily, so I went back in the water to play.

Little did I know that a big rip was on the way towards me. I saw the rip and it started coming towards me and I started screaming to mum "MUM THERES A RIP! HELP!" She responded "I'm not falling for your tricks again!"

It was getting harder and stronger by the second and I tried screaming again but it was no use. As I was getting sucked in the rip I felt two hands grab me and pull me to shore. While I was laying on the wet sand, my consciousness started to slowly reappear as I looked up to see my parents bending over me.

My Mum said nothing as my Dad walked over to me, picked me up and walked over to the car. It was the quietest car trip home ever, I'm almost certain of it. When I got home my parents gave me an absolute tuning!

Obituary:- Ruth Coulston

She instilled her family with creativity and passion

Ruth was born just before Christmas 1939 into the home of Doug and Jean Embery. Born just four years after Jim and two years after Agnes, the house and children took all of Jean's energy.

Doug was away for large chunks of time during the war years running a sawmilling business. It was in these years that Jean's character was formed. The selflessness and resilience required by the times meant everyone was expected to do their bit and not make a fuss.

As a child Ruth could be stoic and stubborn meeting life head on. When trouble brewed, as it so often did, she never ran for cover.

After the war, Doug and Jean's family was completed by the arrival of Bruce, Joan and Joyce.

The younger siblings gave Ruth the opportunity to practice her caring skills. She valued the capacity to care for others with generosity to the end of her life. Even as her energy levels slipped lower, she preserved her energy to keep in contact with long term friends, feed visitors, bring in the neighbours washing and get seedlings started in the greenhouse.

Summer was never her favourite time of the year. She hated the heat in her later years but as a young woman she loved the opportunities to get in the water. A strong and confident swimmer the family photo album shows Ruth and her siblings loaded on to one of Doug's trucks for trips to the river. When the grandchildren were tiny she was the first one in her bathers - making sure that they picked up this important survival skill.

Ruth left school at the end of Year 10 and began working at Kaighin's General Store. She enjoyed the contact with women who phoned in their orders every week and kept in contact with some of them for many years.

Ruth married Fred Coulston in autumn 1959. Theirs was a long and fruitful marriage. They were quickly surrounded by five children - Linda, Kaye, Jim, Judith and Gordon. Ruth and Fred settled at Lucyvale where they continued the family worker came by and yes, the family found the notes about what still needed to be done!

The family moved to Corryong in 1967. Fred worked as an earthmover and when time allowed, Ruth extended her creative sewing skills to commercial dressmaking. She purchased a heavy Singer sewing machine to assist with these items and it remained a prized possession. Her commercial dressmaking extended to making several wedding dresses. The photos of these were proudly kept in the family album.

Ruth loved sharing her creative skills. When the grandchildren reached secondary school, Ruth offered her sewing skills to produce costumes for the school drama production 'Bats'. There were happy days sewing outfits that included 14 lederhosen complete with braces and hats!

Ruth took dressing up seriously, planning outfits for special occasions as soon as the new event was announced. She loved strong colours and patterns and hats! It's always important to "make an effort" she would say. Ruth freely gave wardrobe advice to all her children and their partners and grandchildren. She would describe an outfit or shoes as "glorious, simply glorious."

dairy. Ruth always loved a system and coached by her mother-in-law, Susan, she thrived at 'Rosebank'.

She managed the garden, fed calves and poddied lambs and preserved the excess produce. She sewed baby outfits from Enid Gilchrist pattern books.

Fred encouraged Ruth to be self-reliant. When she developed a powerful craving for fish while expecting Linda, Fred proposed an excursion. He collected rods and a picnic basket and took Ruth down to the creek. Dad was no great fan of fishing, so the plan was to get Ruth set up so she could catch her own! When the fishing trip was unsuccessful and Ruth was still in the grip of the craving, Fred's brother Jack - a dab hand with the fishing rod - stepped in and regularly bought Ruth fish.

Not much was known about Ruth's early education but she made sure her family all had every opportunity to thrive at school. This included moving Judith and Gordon to the Catholic School when she felt Gordon was not being supported at the State School. It's hard to imagine now that this was controversial but even in the 1970s the move was not popular with her parents but Ruth's determination carried the day.

As the family grew, Ruth had a ready-made army of willing - and sometimes, not so willing - helpers on hand for whatever tasks needed completion. The long school holidays would often involve a day trip to Batlow to collect cherries or blackberrying at Nariel and the next day they would help preserve the results of the previous day's harvest. Ruth always had a list of jobs and home maintenance tasks ready to go when a willing

Algae alert issued for farms

The recent flooding event combined with warmer weather conditions has produced favourable conditions for blue-green algae to thrive in farm water supplies and standing flood water.

Senior Veterinary Officer with Agriculture Victoria, Dianne Phillips, said livestock owners need to remain alert as ingestion of blue-green algae can result in the poisoning of livestock.

“As there is no specific treatment for blue-green algae poisoning, producers should check standing bodies of water and farm water supplies daily for blooms, as this remains the most effective way of preventing stock deaths,” she advised.

“Blue-green algal blooms typically appear as surface scum that looks like a suspension of green paint, often with an earthy smell. However, the colour may range from pale green to dark brown.”

Deaths can occur when stock drink toxins produced by the blue-green algae, often when it is concentrated on the down-wind side of a water supply and has formed a dense, surface scum.

Animals that have consumed blue-green algal toxin may appear ill very rapidly, develop a staggering gait, collapse, begin to convulse and die – typically within 24 hours – depending on the toxicity of the bloom and the concentration of the toxin.

Those that don’t die immediately, often suffer from severe liver damage. This may lead to the development of jaundice (the yellows) or photosensitisation over the next few days. Livestock that recover from these ailments often suffer from chronic ill-thrift.

If a suspicious bloom is noticed, the water supply should be isolated as quickly as possible and a safe alternate water supply provided.

“Where possible producers should identify an alternative water supply, prior to their primary source of livestock drinking water being affected by a bloom,” Dr Phillips said.

“There may not be time to identify an alternative water source once the primary water supply is affected. We recommend laboratory testing of the water supply for the presence of blue-green algae and a post-mortem or examination of dead or sick animals by a veterinarian.”

Contaminated water should not be used to irrigate vegetables and fruit or come in contact with plants being grown for food, particularly fruit and vegetables that are mostly eaten raw such as apples, grapes, tomatoes, strawberries, cabbages and other salad greens.

Dr Phillips said dogs are also prone to poisoning as they can swim in farm water supplies and should be kept away from suspect water sources. Further information on blue-green contamination in your livestock water supply is available at <https://go.vic.gov.au/3UR90aO>.

Ruth’s children became “bowls orphans”

Building the new house was a great delight to Ruth. There was a new garden to plant and an opportunity to cull some stuff and lead a simple, ordered life – just her and Fred. She would be very pleased to know that her prized roses have been left in peak condition.

By the time Gordon started high school, the children all became “bowls orphans.” Ruth and Fred had become avid devotees of lawn bowls and were often away for one tournament or another. Ruth excelled and became bowling champion in 1987. The family was also encouraged to follow their passions and to do their best at whatever they turned their hands to, regardless of whether they had any particular talent.

For Ruth, participation in sport was always more important than the win or loss. She taught her family that it’s equally important to be gracious and humble in victory and defeat.

Ruth loved netball and enjoyed watching and scoring for her own children and grandchildren - and of course, she was roped into making the netball uniforms! When she ran out of children and grandchildren to watch, she “adopted” some.

Ruth went to the netball every Saturday in those last winters – until her health prevented her.

Fred and Ruth were finally parted in winter last year, such a short time ago. Her family had hoped Ruth would live for many more years and enjoy making an independent life as her last chapter. This was not to be and when Ruth received her diagnosis, she accepted it with all her characteristic stoicism. She never relented from her decision not to have treatment. Ruth prepared her house and family for her decline, delighting in the time she could spend with them.

It is fitting that Ruth left this world at the end of spring, her life of work and toil ending.

We are the flowers of your garden, Mum. You have tended us all, planted seeds for joy and hope in our lives. You encouraged us to be resilient, self-reliant, and organised. Take rest now. The jobs are done, the garden will continue to grow and we will keep your memory at its heart.

Stay safe for cod season

Recreational fishers are being encouraged to check waterway conditions during Murray cod season which starts today.

Victorian Fisheries Authority CEO, Travis Dowling, said the Murray cod closed season during September, October, and November each year gives the species a chance to breed in peace.

"This season's opening day will be unusual with dozens of popular waterways flood affected and potentially unsafe, even for shore-based freshwater fishers," Mr Dowling said.

"We urge everyone to plan ahead, do their homework on river conditions and if in doubt, head to safer destinations.

"We all love Murray cod and season opening is a social occasion on the calendar but it's not worth risking the safety of loves ones including family and friends."

Mr Dowling said track and road closures could also mean favourite spots for season opening are inaccessible or suitable for four-wheel drives only.

"There is a lot of information about the condition of tracks, boat ramps, lakes and rivers so now is the time to jump online, get informed about the prevailing conditions and short-list your options," he said.

Apps and websites providing valuable details include:-

- VicTraffic for road closures
- VicEmergency and the Bureau of Meteorology for the latest weather and flood warnings
- Boating Vic app for boat ramp status and conditions
- Parks Victoria for track and park closures

Women's golf sessions continue

Ladies graced the fairways at Welaregang again on Sunday when seven eager participants were given their second block of lessons by Thurgoona professional, Penny Graeber.

Sponsored by Golf NSW, this program is for women of any age or ability. Currently the average age of women golfers across NSW is 67 years. Golf NSW is seeking to change this statistic by making the game accessible and appealing to younger women and programs such as Get Into Golf for Women are a good start.

At Welaregang, all registered participants are well under 67 and they are responding very positively to Penny's expert tuition. On Sunday everyone appreciated the balmy spring weather and excellent golfing conditions.

Penny instructed individually for an hour, then there was a short break for everyone to enjoy morning tea on the deck while taking in the superb views and after that the group was split into three for a three-hole ambrose, with other club members helping in each group.

The Welaregang program concludes next Sunday 4th December, when the two hour session will be followed by a sausage sizzle lunch. Starting time is 10am. All those who registered are welcome to attend.

With The Bias

Pennant news:- The weekend team travelled to Dederang on Saturday and won by 13 shots 60-47, winning two of the three matches. The midweek team is home this week to Corowa RSL.

On Wednesday there were 22 players, with the winners being Peter Sullivan and Richie Bennetts. Good to have Peter back for the day.

Nine players were there on Thursday and Pat Sheather and Joyce Thompson were the winners.

The Ladies Championship Singles will commence today.

The next men's event is the Championship Triples, at 10.30am on Sunday 4th December.

The next committee meeting is at 7.30pm on Wednesday 7th December

We have a new set of Rookie Rollers from Bowls Australia. This is an exciting bowls game for the younger school children, so we hope to get the schools participating in this. The older kids have been coming for a bowl, which we encourage. Bowls is an amazing game which can be played by 10 year olds, right through to those of 100!

Remember to put

Sunday 18th December into your diaries - that's the Club Christmas breakup, with bowls in the afternoon followed by a BBQ. Our Grand Raffles will be drawn, with a new set of Aero bowls and also two hampers as the prizes.
